MARCH 14, 1988
TUSCON, ARIZONA

I knew Ed Abbey for 15 years but only asked to take his photograph once.

Ed and Clarke had invited me many times to visit them in Tuscon, but I had never taken up their offer. This time, in early 1988, Ed insisted.

I made the long drive to their home south of Tuscon from Moab and they were gracious hosts. I slept in Ed's studio, where he did most of his writing .

We went to an exhibition baseball game at Hi Corbett Field, talked politics, the environment, and maybe for the first time in our long friendship, I began to feel comfortable around this man I had idolized for so long. I finally felt confident enough to argue with him!

And on one lovely evening, as Ed chopped wood barefooted and the light was just right,

I asked Ed if I could take his photograph. He mumbled something, nodded and

I took this picture. The date was March 14, 1988.

Ed Abbey died exactly one year later....JS
