“They seemed so angry, it was as if they were...HUMAN!” HUMMINGBIRD WARS

The advance scouts show up every April...usually the 24th...I can set my calendar by it. By the end of May they're already starting to bicker and by July, when the rufous hummers show up, it's almost like all-out WAR.

Who says humans are uniquely violent? It seems to me our hummingbird cousins exhibit every miserable human trait. I've watched the hummer above chase away every potential visitor to my feeder, though it meant he never had an opportunity to use the feeder himself. When they do physical combat, the hummers strike each other in mid-air with such fury, I can hear the sound of their collision and wonder how either of them survived the impact.

Still, in September, they leave their Utah Battleground and go South to Central America for the winter. Somewhere in Guatemala, perhaps, they start the wars all over again. And next April, most of them will be back to fight another day...JS
