Trying to stay
dry in a cold
October storm
on the river...

The world's most scenic toilet.

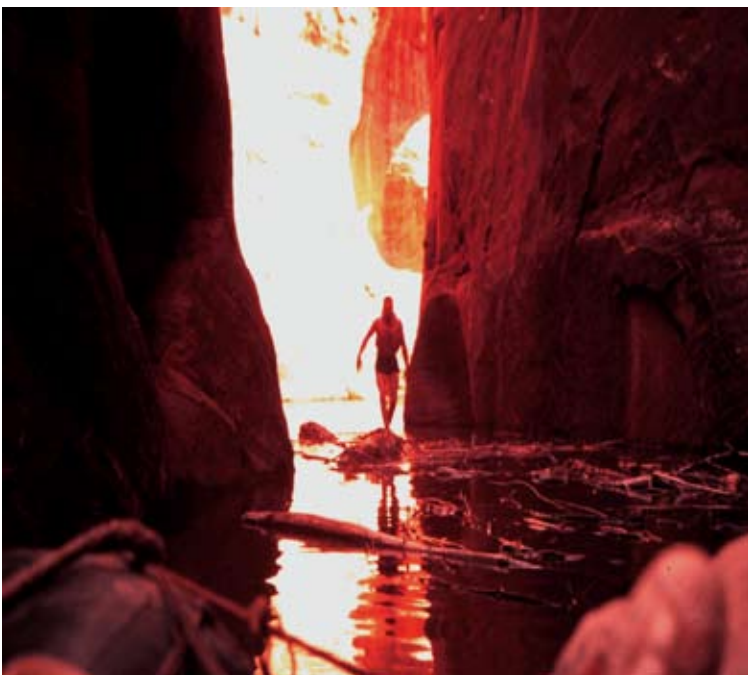

Approaching storm.

Rainbow bridge...a six mile hike from the river in October 1962

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1962

Well this is the last day. Up shortly before dawn--lovely pink clouds. Went for a walk. Even a little climb. EGADS! Back. Breakfast. Packed...we're off. Too bad I don't have more film.

Saw pregnant women petros again. And I swear some lizard was waiting around to have his picture taken....Day is good bit cooler--need sweaters and jackets on the river. Beautiful here but cloudy--almost complete overcast downriver.

Later...Has heated up some now. Navajo cliffs on both sides of the river with Wingate plus other (formations) set back and rising...Won't be too long before the trip is over. Gunsight Butte now in view. Supposed to be only 14 miles. This last day has brought some spectacular formations into view...all sorts of castles in the air.

Tired...Wonderful trip.

End of the line...the takeout at Kane Creek.
