In Notes on Paper, Falke walks us through the landscape of one man's mind, which contains both his past and an awareness of our common future. From within private memories the narrator reaches out to us with 'we' and 'you', and each spare line invokes the hope that we, like him, are worthy of return to our most longed for places. And if to return is not our fate, and really it never can be, the narrator bids us survey our own memories, taking time in the present for the winds, and the words, that move the world.

"Jim Stiles holds up a mirror to those of us living in the American West, exposing issues we may not want to face. We are all complicit in the shadow side of growth. His words are born not so much out of anger but a broken heart.

He says he writes elegies for the landscape he loves, that he is "hopelessly clinging to the past."

I would call Stiles a writer from the future.

Brave New West is a book of import because of what it chooses to expose."

All the Wild That Remains

By Gessner, David

This engaging book provides an intimate look at Edward Abbey (1927-89) and Wallace Stegner (1909-93), two of America's finest authors, both of whom chafed at being pigeon-holed as regional writers. Certainly their fond, passionate focus was the American West, but there is much universality in their concerns. Gessner ("Return of the Osprey") traveled to places they haunted, read all he could of their writings, and spoke with people who knew them well.
